"There is one feature in the recent elections which does infinite credit to the liberality, intelligence, and sound sense of the people of Mississippi, and that is, the signal manner in which they have rebuked the attempts of the partisan leaders to bring party to bear in deciding upon the relative merits of candidates for Judicial honors. In the strongest Whig district in the State, a judge of the opposite party has been triumphantly re-elected to an office, whose duties he has long and faithfully discharged; while in another district, the Cass incumbent has been reelected without opposition-a compliment justly due to the impartiality with which he has administered law and justice without fear, favor or affection. In the Northern judicial districts, (strongly Cass,) Judges Miller and Rodgers, (Taylor men,) have been re-elected by large and respectable majorities, altho strong appeals were made to the voters, opposed to them, by some of the leaders of the dominant party, to draw the party line upon the able and accomplished incumbents and to elect to those offices candidates of their own party. Those who doubt the capacity of the people to make proper and judicious selections of judicial functionaries and who imagine a partisan, executive, or legislative caucus, would do things any better, need only look to the able judiciary of Mississippi under the elective system, to be effectually cured of that error." journals of that State. The Affairs of Europe.

The more closely the present affairs of Europe are studied, the greater appears the influence of Russia as contra-distinguished from that of England. In the late difficulty with France, Palmerston was compelled to yield, not so much from dread of Louis Napoleon as from the fact that the autocrat was combined with the French President. We notice, among the more important items brought by the Niagara, that the claims of the British Cabinet, for losses suffered by British subjects during the continental troubles, have been met with a direct refusal from Austria, and an insinuation from the Czar that he entirely concurs in the sentiment of the Cabinet of Vienna; and that, if British subjects are to make such claims, the Russian dominions will hereafter be shut against them. In this, as in the Greek affair, England, we presume, will yield. With all eastern Europe against her, and a majority of her own people averse to war, she cannot, for a moment, entertain the thought of asserting her claims by force. Fifty years ago, no power would have dared to address her thus without a declaration of hostilities. Her long struggle with Napoleon, from the re-commencement of the war after the peace of Amiens, had its origin in insults to her supremacy less marked, as well as less dangerous to her nationality. But times have changed since 1803 for all; and for none more than for Great Britain.

Nations, as well as men, have their infancy, their growth, their manhood, and their decline. We fear that the old age of England is coming on; and we regret it. Though her career has exhibited many aberrations from the cause of justice, she has been, on the whole, the most liberal power in Europe, and continued by Messrs. Disney, Thompson, of Pa., her loss of influence, at this critical period, cannot Toombs, Van Dyke, McDonald and Strong. but tell disadvantageously on the hopes of freedom in the Old World. Should treachery, combined with disgust at the broken promises of republicanism, bring about the restoration of the Bourbons in France, there will be no power left, even in western Europe, except England, to make head against despotism; and England's ability will be gone. The future, indeed, looks disastrous. If it were not for our abiding 94. The Chair voted in the negative. The whole population is 138,788, of which number 52,961 are from Ireland, 10,359 from other foreign countries, and 2,-112 are blacks. The population of Boston in 1742, when the first census was taken, was 16,382, of which number 1374 were blacks, nearly as many as now. In 1750, a century ago, the slaves in Boston were 989. The whole population in the city, in 1750, was 18,038; in 1800 it was 24,937; in 1820 it was 43,-298; in 1830 it was 61,392; and in 1840 it was 85,- was the lowa contested election, and that the queslarge a population as the city proper. Thirty-First Congress-First Session-TUESDAY, June 25 .- SENATE.

Mr. Davis, of Massachusetts, presented a memorial from citizens of Worcester, Mass., in favor of a repeal of the tariff of '46. Mr. Davis made a speech in favor of a protective tariff. The memorial was laid on the table.

Mr. Pearce, of Maryland, presented the memorial of Miss Dix, asking a grant of land for the establishment of a National Insane Asylum. Mr. Pearce, on presenting the memorial, enforced it by some remarks, stating, amongst other things, the fact that the insane population of the United States now amounted to twenty-two thousand; a larger number, in proportion to population, than that of any other known country. The memorial was referred to a select committee.

The Senate took up the bill granting to the State of Mississippi the right of way, and a donation of public land, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Brandon to the eastern border of said State, in the direction of Montgomery, Ala. After a short debate, on motion of Mr. Clay, the bill was laid on the table for the purpose of taking up the compromise bill.

Mr. Soule resumed and concluded the remarks he commenced yesterday, in support of his amendment, (the division of California by the Missouri Compremise line;) after which.

Mr. Douglas obtained the floor, but yielded to a motion to go into executive session. After a short time so spent, the Senate adjourned.

The Lowell Advertiser, right on the spot, shows how this is done. 'The policy of the owners of the Lowell factories has been, (says that paper,) to get their work done by the cheapest labor they could find. Acting upon that policy, they have introduced foreign laborers to the exclusion of Americans, until the Americans do not number over one-third of the operatives of Lowell."
